Colli di Luni is a DOC title for wines from the coastal hills around Massa and La Spezia in northwest Italy. It is only one of 15 of the 425+ Italian appellations that crosses over from one administrative region to the next. Everything about the Colli di Luni represents the transition between Liguria and Tuscany – the geography, the grape varieties, and the wine styles. The name refers to Luna ('the moon'), so given to this area by the Romans. There are connections with the moon on many levels here.

Vermentino has proven to be by far the most popular white – an excellent match for the local cuisine, especially the testaroli (wholemeal dumplings with pesto). Vermentinos from Colli di Luni are typically less herbaceous than those from further north in Liguria, and are rarely as rich and floral as those from Sardinia. They are most often medium bodied, with aromas of basil and sage, and a hint of almonds on the finish.

Only the best bunches of Vermentino grapes are picked, then subjected to cryomaceration for about 48 hours, gentle pressing and vinification, again in temperature controlled stainless steel tanks. The outcome is a complex wine – traditional characteristics of Vermentino are enriched and enhance the sensations in the nose and the mouth. Structure and acidity give the wine a long life with interesting evolution.

IL SETTIMANALE ECONOMICO DEL GAMBERO ROSSO

7 YEARS IN A ROW!

A white wine with great texture and appeal. The colour is an intense straw-yellow with light golden highlights. An elegant aroma with clear hints of wildflowers, aromatic herbs, spices, ripe fruit, honey. Tasty, harmonious and persistent on the palate. A wine of great structure.
